Dear Sarah,

Public spaces create opportunities for communities to interact, engage, and build a shared sense of local identity — but historically, the people who have enjoyed public spaces in communities have been limited to those who are invited in. After the pandemic, how do communities rebuild their public spaces in equitable and inclusive ways? What role do history, culture and the arts play in the future of urban spaces?

On the next episode of Coast to Coast, we're talking with Walter Hood, a world-renowned landscape architect, Knight Public Spaces Fellow, and creative director and founder of Hood Design Studio. Together, we'll explore how urban spaces can preserve history and build community.
